Minister waited upon Mr. Henderson, Chief of the Metropolitan Police, and introduced to him Mr. Charles Spritz, diamond merchant of Paris and Brazil. Mr. Spritz went to Liverpool with an introduction from Mr. Henderson, to Captain Nott Bower, chief constable of Liverpool, requesting that assistance should be given to Mr. Spritz with the view of tracing Bruta Allesandro, and also to see the jewels in possession of Mr. Philips,s who bought them from Allesandro. Mr. Spritz went to Mr. Philips' establishment, where the jewels were produced, and he at once Mr. Philips the full amount given for the jewels, and also handsomely rewarded him and the two police officers concerned in the case. Mr. Spritz's description of how these robberies where effected showed extraordinary ingenuity on the part of the thieves. ARNOLD'S BROMG-CELEDY annivable. thieves. In Buenos Ayres, Luiz de Rezente & Co. carry on business as wholesaie diamond merchants, and their premises were fixed upon by the thieves for their operations. The gang entered a sewer on the shores of the bay, and constructed a tunnel from the sewer, a distance of several hundred yards, to the site of the diamond merchants' premises, and they then worked upwards from the tunnel a distance of over ten feet into the basement of the establishment. The police say that the work must have occupied many weeks. The premises were entered on Sunday, and the thieves carried away jewels to the value of over $10,000. They were probably frightened away, for another case containing jewels to the value of $100,000, and which might easily have been carried away, was untouched. The Brazilian police are satisfied that, if Allesandro had been detained, it would have led to the arrest of the whole gang who had perpetrated these extraordinary robberies. Another burg-lary was effected in Buenos Ayres by the same gang in a simila St. James Gazette (London).
